It's an okay book as long as you understand that like most gen-ed History texts it's more condensed and generalized as there's simply too much history to cover in the semester so the text is adjusted accordingly. Additionally, if detailed history knowledge is sought then you won't be using this text, rather you'll look for texts that specifically address what you want to know about.This text isn't a difficult read, it's just not a real deep look into the history being covered, rather it's trying to pack as much info in, stated as simple as possible.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Served it's purpose as a textbook... and ...By Teslynn AlbrechtServed it's purpose as a textbook... and I ACTUALLY use this. Most of the times you get a book and you never even need to open it, but this was very helpful.2 of 2 people found the following review helpful.

Needed for schoolBy SamhainI needed this book for school but didn't want to pay school price so I went to and found this! What I didn't like about the book itself is that some of the information is confusing because some of the details are so subtle. You really have to read between the lines. I still recommend buying this book if you need it for class though. Even though the shipping is fast I don't recommend buying it at the last minute.

About the Author Edward H. Judge and John W. Langdon are professors of history at Le Moyne College, where they have team-taught for the last 20 years a two-semester world history course for first-year students as well as courses on modern global history for upper-level students. Judge earned his doctorate at the University of Michigan and spent a year in the USSR as an IREX scholar. He has taught at Le Moyne since 1978, was the college's scholar of the year in 1994 and was awarded the J. C. Georg Endowed Professorship in 1997. Langdon earned his doctorate at Syracuse University's Maxwell School of Public Affairs, where he was a national defense fellow. He has taught at Le Moyne since 1971, directed its honors program and was awarded the O'Connell Distinguished Teaching Professorship in 1996. Each has been named the college's teacher of the year and has chaired its department of history. They have written or edited eight books: three in collaboration with each other, three as individuals and two in collaboration with other scholars. They love teaching world history, especially to students of diverse backgrounds and interests, and they derive great joy from infecting their students with a passion and enthusiasm for the study of the human past.
