From University of Toronto Press, Scholarly Publishing Division : Religious Radicalization and Securitization in Canada and Beyond before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Religious Radicalization and Securitization in Canada and Beyond:

After the terrorist attacks of 9/11, those in London and Madrid, and the arrest of the Toronto 18, Canadians have changed how they think about terrorism and security. As governments respond to the potential threat of homegrown radicalism, many observers have become concerned about the impact of those security measures on the minority groups whose lives are securitized. In Religious Radicalization and Securitization in Canada and Beyond, Paul Bramadat and Lorne Dawson bring together contributors from a wide range of academic disciplines to examine the challenges created by both religious radicalism and the states and society's response to it. This collection takes a critical look at what is known about religious radicalization, how minorities are affected by radicalization from within and securitization from without, and how the public, media, and government are attempting to cope with the dangers of both radicalization and securitization. Religious Radicalization and Securitization in Canada and Beyond is an ideal guide to the ongoing debates on how best to respond to radicalization without sacrificing the commitments to multiculturalism and social justice that many Canadians hold dear.

This is a remarkable and timely volume that brings together into sharp focus some of the most disturbing and perplexing issues of our time: religiously motivated radicalism, terrorism, and national security. (Marat Shterin, Senior Lecturer, Department of Theology and Religious Studies, Kings College London) Religious Radicalization and Securitization in Canada and Beyond makes an important contribution not only to debates about religion and radicalism in Canada but also to the much broader debate on the place and nature of religion within liberal and secular states. (Jennifer Selby, Department of Religious Studies, Memorial University) This collection should be required reading for anyone who intends to discuss terrorism and religious identity in Canada and other multicultural Western democracies. (Jez Littlewood, Director, Canadian Centre of Intelligence and Security Studies, Norman Paterson School of International Affairs, Carleton University) About the Author Paul Bramadat is a professor and director of the Centre for Studies in Religion and Society at the University of Victoria. His previous works include Religious Radicalization in Canada and Beyond and Christianity and Ethnicity in Canada both published by University of Toronto Press. Lorne Dawson is a professor and Chair of the Department of Sociology and Legal Studies at the University of Waterloo.
