Because we got so interested in this course, we did not go back enough years to the ancient history: One year expired before we got to well before B.C.What this teacher started with was to pick up a major social issue of that time. Then, asked us why this issue is here now? Why people argue about it so much, now?And, he pointed out the potential cause, and, kepts going backwards. To think of it, this is really why we learn history, isn't it? I bought a few copy of this book for my young nephews and nieces, and other young friends, just for that. What effect does this event/person have today? Is this event/person ranked too high or too low? ... ? I think the book is a real treasure that way.With good pictures, it may also make a

The flush toilet and the discovery of the potato. The Declaration of Independence and the invention of plastic. The first novel and man's first steps on the moon. These are some of the 100 most important events, discoveries and magnificent moments of the past 1,000 years, as selected - and ranked - by the editors of Life in this highly readable and lushly illustrated tour of the millennium. It's an encyclopedic and entertaining account of human progress from 1001 to the present a book you'll want to save for the next 1,000 years.
