Ranbir Vohra : The Making of India: A Historical Survey (Literature and Culture; 101) before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The Making of India: A Historical Survey (Literature and Culture; 101):

This work offers a broad survey of India's search for political identity in the context of a culture marked by strong conflicting socio-religious traditions. The book also surveys the historical development of India from earliest times through British colonialism to the present. Among the discussions are a comparison of Indian historical development with that of China; a view of the development of Indian civilization and political culture in terms of the socio-religious conflicts and traditions of Hindus and Moslems; and coverage of the politicization of religion and communalization of politics in the current era which pits Moslems against Hindus, challenging the unity and secular nature of the Indian state.

From the Back Cover
This thoughtful, balanced, and highly readable work provides a masterful sweep of the long and variegated history of India and its current struggle for modernity. Basing his narrative line on the socioreligious tradition of India, the author helps the reader understand how India's past lives on into the present and how the complex interaction among the forces of imperialism, tradition, and modernity have complicated the problems of state and nation building in contemporary India.
